Trannies are mentally unstable psychopaths. Stop the presses! We already knew this, but a lot of new joins in the game probably still don't get it. Even after the Aubrey Hale shooting, I doubt this needs to be said to any of my subscribers, but don't interact with these freak shows. There's absolutely no reason to put yourself anywhere near such mentally unstable people. If you have to, keep an eye on them, the way you would keep in eye on the weird potential school shooter kid back in school.

A few months back, I put out the article Election Blowback regarding potential political violence from the Left after the election & beginning of the 2nd Trump admin. A few noted how the tone was more serious than my usual writings, and that's because it was. Many of you probably already know I have a long history with the subject of political violence. It's a strong point of personal interest, part of my professional career, & I was a member of a "international terrorist organization" according to the British government. I consider myself a subject matter expert, especially considering that I was quickly proven correct by events like the attempted assassination of the SecDef in DC.

I'll touch on that later, for now I'll focus on the "Zizians," a group that would be considered a hate crime if you made them as antagonists in some book. This group was founded by a man (later transgender woman) named Jack LaSota. LaSota was a programmer & part of the tech scene in SoCal. More specifically, he was active on rationalist forums & put forth very extreme versions of typical tech bro rationalism. This is the crowd that often talks about AI, singularity, & other similar stuff. Neoreaction is also roughly related to this.

At some point, LaSota (now going by the fittingly stupid tranny name "Ziz") became popular on these forums for his radical views. That isn't to say that they gained a huge following, just that he got a number of followers. Some point prior to 2019, this little circle became more of an underground network. This tends to happen when normal conversations take a turn towards radicalism. The same thing happened on the old IronMarch forum, actual organizations communicated in private ways rather than on the public forum.

The "Zizians" first real world activity was the protest of a seminar hosted by a few non profits in the rationalist community. It's safe to say that by this point, they were rejected by the community at large. Nothing major happened, but they dressed in robes & Guy Fawkes masks (lmao), handed out flyers, & were eventually arrested. Ziz apparently took great issue with the fact that the wider scene didn't really care about veganism, transgender issues, or a theory about brain hemispheres he made up.

After the arrest of Ziz & his buddies, one of the funniest trials I've ever read about took place. None of the defendants could stick with a lawyer because they wanted them to be vegan, they accused the judge of being part of a "cis-supremacist cult," and Ziz said the court threatened him life because the judge made her take off her gas mask & exposed him to COVID. The trial was over Zoom. Eventually, Ziz died. Drowned in a boating accident in the SF Bay. No body recovered & the only witnesses were two fellow Zizians. You can probably tell where this is going.

The trail, at this point, was down to two. One was dead & another missing. The trial eventually dropped down to one, as a defendant was killed & the other one arrested for attempted murder in a completely unrelated incident. Thoughts & prayers for whatever judge had to deal with this shit.

A few months later, in November of 2022, we get the story of a typical San Francisco boomer being retarded. A man named Curtis Lind became involved with Ziz & his friends way back in 2017. He wasn't involved in anything, just a landlord that let the group moor Ziz's boat & eventually rent a trailer on his property. In a total shock, the tranny anarchists stopped paying rent. This led Lind to take the group to court & sue. The group didn't budge & began taking over the property, even other trailers, as well as threatening Lind with a knife. He began carrying a pistol.

Eventually, Lind was called to fix a leak at one of the properties. As he walked around the back, he was beat over the head & knocked down by 3 Zizians. He was stabbed a few dozen times, they tried (& failed) to cut off his head, and one of the attackers stabbed him with a sword. He pulled out his pistol & shot two of them. He killed one & wounded the other, these were the 2 defendants mentioned earlier. The wounded one & the other one were charged with murder, as California considers any deaths that occur during a crime to be the responsibility of the criminal.

During the police reaction, they found Ziz alive & well. He was taken for questioning but not charged, this is also where I learned that faking your death has no legal consequences.

About a month later, police found the bodies of an elderly couple that were shot to death execution style in their home. The immediate suspect was their son, another Zizian tranny. This is partially because the police already knew that the son owned a 9mm pistol, the same used in the killing, because he let the police hold on to the firearm while being questioned some time earlier. Hex's tip for prospective criminals & militants - don't fucking do stuff like this with a firearm known to local police that are already investigating you.

Police tracked the son down to hotel he was staying at, and searched the relevant rooms. Inside, they found a random dude & Ziz, who was now wanted for not showing up to court. He tried playing dead & had to be dragged out. Back in Cali, Lind was supposed to testify in court over the attack on him. He didn't make it, his throat was slit by another Zizian outside his home in broad daylight.

Meanwhile, in Vermont, police are investigating a pair of Zizians. They were reported by a hotel staff member for wearing tactical clothing & brandishing a pistol, not far from the Canadian border. Eventually, BP agents pull them over on the interstate. The situation quickly turns into a firefight that leaves a BP agent & one Zizian dead, while the other is wounded. Notably, the dead tranny was actually a German national here on a work visa. The car contained a bunch of tactical gear, ammo, helmets, radios, etc. It's still unclear what their intentions were. The firearms were purchased by the son who killed his parents earlier, who is currently still loose.

At this time, Ziz is quiet & considered a person of interest in all the aforementioned crimes. It's highly likely he's under 24/7 surveillance by the police & soon to be arrested for something or another. At the time of writing this, Ziz has apparently faked his own death again in even less believable circumstances.

I should also point out that another tranny attempted to kill a few Republican officials in DC a few days ago. Nothing linking him to Ziz, but it wouldn't surprise me as trannies are a fight knit bunch.

So, why write about this? We already know trannies are mentally unstable & ticking time bombs of some sort of craziness. Well for one, it's funny. These people are all laughably incompetent at everything they do. It also comes across like a throwaway faction in Ready or Not.

Overall, I like treating these sorts of things as learning experiences. For one, it can happen here. These types of things exist in America & will likely continue to grow in frequency as more people get fed up with society for some reason or another. It can, & will, happen here, in real life.

Another important point is that these Zizians have garnered quite the fanbase among the newly disenfranchised Left. Even though they never actually killed anyone important or that could be considered an ideological target, there's a lot of Lefties expressing support for this clearly Left coded group. You can go see yourself, just check Reddit or Twitter for the news articles & look through the comments. They see this as part of the "Resistance," & aren't even shy about taking ownership of it.

This isn't new, we saw the same sentiment after the two attempts on Trump's life & the Luigi's Mansion murder. The main difference is that the Zizian's victims were just random people. Considering one was renting his property to trannies & the others had a tranny son, the victims were most likely left-leaning if anything. The BP agent was obviously the exception. This sort of popular sentiment is an absolute prerequisite for ideological violence. It leads to a sort of peer pressure effect, & gives a motivation for people who are willing to carry out these actions.

I've brought it up before, but the Boogaloo movement back in 2019 was very important. Not because they were ever going to actually do anything, but because it showed popular support for outright violence against the government. There are many people that own shirts or doormats that directly threaten ATF or FBI agents, even if in a tongue in cheek manner. This, in turn, has led to people like the Branch Davidians, the Weaver family, Timothy McVeigh, Marvin Heemeyer, and even Ted Kaczynski gaining mass support. This support must come before widespread violence, inherently.

It's also interesting to note that the Zizians, on paper, are not a violent group by design. It's not like Atomwaffen or some terror cell that forms for the purpose of carrying out attacks. The Zizians were simply a hyperspecific fringe group within certain philosophical forums. Regardless, they managed to form close bonds & have generally been tight lipped about their crimes. I think this is a good example of how violent organizations can come to be. Even during earlier days of political violence, the Days of Rage, most violent organizations simply sprouted out of moderate student organizations.

This is also seen abroad, organizations like Al-Qaeda or the Taliban often came from moderate sections of Islamist politics. The truth is, if you put a thousand people with generally similar beliefs in a group, a handful are bound to be radicals & /or militants. Similarly, there's bound to be many groups that appear out of businesses, moderate volunteer groups, or other places where somewhat likeminded people meet up & talk to each other. This is why most violent movements are actually extremely hard to pin down. Groups in the US, over the last 15 years, were easy to track because they didn't follow this trend. They often found each other on websites dedicated to ideological extremism, like UnicornRiot or IronMarch. The powers at be could simply watch these small websites & track its users across platforms (very easy to do). It was always a lot harder when looking at micro-communities like discord servers or group chats. These certainly aren't "private," in the cybersecurity sense, but they aren't in the open & obvious about their intentions.

Finally, I will reiterate the warning I made in Election Blowback. Be prepared for more violence from the Left, I'd be shocked if Trump isn't targeted by another wannabe Oswald by the end of his term. The widespread support in Lefty spaces for these militants, as well as Leftists generally being far more prone to mental illness, only adds fuel to the flame. This is all fine & dandy if you aren't a fairly popular RW influencer, politician, or hold a stereotypically "RW" job (Border Patrol, ICE agent, etc.). I have made it clear in previous articles that "influencers" are the most likely target of political violence in our age, just like how ideologically hostile journalists were often targeted in previous conflicts. That being said, I'd estimate that you must be at least as popular as Richard Spencer to be targeted or even known of by your ideological opponents.

But, Leftists suck at this. They always have, even the Red Brigades in Italy & Weatherman Underground. They always fuck it up. They try to kill Trump? Miss at 150m & kill three random bystanders. The only time Leftist violence works is in the context of riot, where destruction is so ubiquitous that it's impossible to miss whatever they actually wanted to burn down. Even Luigi's successful killing of the UHS CEO was only possible because he had no idea anyone wanted him dead. Luigi's gun jammed immediately & he made a comically poor get away.

The point being, random bystanders are usually more at risk than the target themselves. Stay safe if you plan on attending an event that Reddit would like to be bombed. Moreover, stop associating with Neurotic Leftoids. I don't mean your aunt who wanted a girl boss president, I mean the actual nutcases that thinks "we're losing our democracy!!!" You shouldn't be associating with these people anyway, you're above that. Don't relax around these freak shows.

Don't believe me? Scroll through Reddit or BlueSky & see how these people talk about coworkers, old friends, & even immediate family that voted Trump. God forbid they find out how many people have moved well beyond Trump by now. There's even calls for violence against people who happen to own a Tesla. The peace & quiet that's plagued Western countries for the last few decades is a historical anomaly, one that's unsustainable.

I should also point out that the FBI & other agencies that handle such issues are gutted. The tactics they've historically used have been cut off from them. This has seriously affected their ability to hinder militant groups. These are the same staff & tactics used against Atomwaffen Division, Aryan Nations, & Terrorgram. I've been told they were also used against a few libertarian & mainstream conservative militias, as well as peaceful groups like Patriot Front. This is good, it takes significant pressure off of radical RW elements of all sorts. It also means that the Feds don't have the means to do the same against Lefty groups, for now.

Makes sense it would be trannies who would form the bulk of the left's boots on the ground. Unlike literally every other do nothing pushover comlie, trannies at least have the balls to cut off their balls. That kind of commitment to an identity has got to breed some intense in group cohesion necessary for waging ideological struggle.

They're still pussys, I'd take my odds 4 to 1 any day, but I can see why them make up the vanguard.
